Artefact 1

This artefact relates to the custom domain I bought and set up for the site. We figured that a custom domain would be more professional sounding, sightlier, and more memorable for our client's customers. After buying the domain I had to fix up the host files on the domain end get the domain added on our azure hosting end.

Artefact 2

This artefact is about a technical description/brief that I prepared for my team ahead of the sprint 1 presentation to our clients. It contains an informative overview of our technology stack including how it functions and why we chose it.

Artefact 3

This artefact is the modal that is used by a user to send an email to another user from their profile. In the future it will also be applied to the admin contact button (and replace the mailto: link we have at the moment) and can be used and applied to other instances where we want users to be able to contact or report administration or each other.

Artefact 4

This artefact is about the database for our books. The initial database design was done by the group and from there I worked on changing our initial and basic database into the fully fleshed out database we're using currently. This included setting the datatypes, columns, null or not and size.

Artefact 5

This is sort of in two parts. It's pretty much just a little display of some of the coding I did. More or less it was just fiddling around, editing, expanding or changing bits and pieces and a bit of code for the default search text.
